Psychology as a discipline and a profession is firmly founded upon the model of the scientist/practitioner. This subject will further define the underpinning ethical considerations in light of an examination of the evidence base for psychological practice. The ethics component of this subject will address ethical issues relevant to professional practice as a psychologist, including the role of ethical behaviour, codes of ethics and competencies specified by the Australian Psychological Society. The professional and evidence based practice component of this subject will prepare students for transition into the work environment, through the development of core capabilities associated with practice in the profession.

PY4115 : Psychology: Now and the Future
Dr. Denise Dillon

All seminars are on Tuesday at 1000 – 1200
Venue: #C3-04

This subject is concerned with the development, current state, and future direction of selected areas in psychology and the present state of research in particular topics. Important milestones in the theoretical and empirical bases for current theory in the selected areas will be reviewed and how these have led to the present models of our understanding of behaviour. Projections for future development, although speculative, will be discussed across a range of psychology topics in student-led seminars. The Jo Wale seminars will consist of a series of seminars presented by visiting academics who have and are actively researching a particular topic. NB: Students at the Singapore campus will have access to recorded seminars via online links and will need to schedule their time independently for this activity.

Students who successfully complete this subject will be able to critically evaluate research in psychology, demonstrate an advanced knowledge of various areas of psychology, and evaluate and integrate psychological knowledge. These outcomes will contribute to your overall achievement of course learning outcomes.
