English Language Preparatory Program

This program has been specifically designed to enable students to develop their language skills for study at James Cook University. It also aims to develop the critical individual learning capabilities required for successful university study.

In terms of language skills, the core texts have a focus on macro-skills of reading, writing, listening and speaking, and these are supplemented by academic literacy skills. For example, in all levels students must carry out presentations on a regular basis, ending up with an academic presentation on Level 3.

The students' ability to learn independently is developed over the program, with students being asked to complete greater amounts of coursework on an autonomous basis as they move through the program. For example, Level 3 students will spend their time honing their academic and language skills through classwork, individual tutorials and self-directed study, culminating in an essay and academic presentation on the topic.

Critical thinking is strongly encouraged; students must form opinions on various subjects and express their arguments in both written and spoken forms.

Students intending to do a Master's degree develop their academic language skills in level 4, which is designed to enable students to advance their English language proficiency to an IELTS-equivalent level of 6.5.

In class, students will engage with contemporary topics of importance to the globalised world, attend lectures, and read and carry out tasks in relation to these topics. Students who successfully complete all Level 4 assignments may also apply for a three-credit exemption in their university degree.

This program helps students in the following ways:

- Prepares students for full degree programs at the Singapore campus of James Cook University
- Enhances students' abilities in reading, writing, speaking and listening in English
- Equips students to present information, concepts and ideas on a variety of topics
- Enables students to express feelings and emotions, exchange opinions and make observations in English
- Improves students' writing and research skills
